

Past Master's Message

Brethren,

What a year we have had. From the moment I was elected to the present, we have seen many “ups” and a few “downs” but overall, I believe we have made many improvements as a lodge and as individuals.

There have been many discussions on the future of our lodge. Many were speculation, many were “what if’s”, and the possible outcomes formulated out of those discussions. The steps we took while I was in the East should extend the livelihood of our lodge for many years to come.

My hope and prayers are that while opinions differed as to the steps taken, we will continue to work together as King Solomon Lodge #6, as a bonded unit, ever reaching to share our brotherhood with all that will listen. And maybe pick up a few more members along the way!

My prayers will be with the new officers for 2026 and each of the members in their daily lives, remembering while around this sacred altar we have promised to relieve, protect and vindicate each other. I will strive to remember my oaths and live them daily, sharing my love for the brotherhood and my God with all.

Here’s to looking forward to a new year! May we all be of one mind, live in peace and may the God of love and peace delight to dwell with and bless you!

P.S. Wow! This is the first time I have said or written that!

Master's Message

Brethren,

I would like to extend a warm thank you for allowing me to serve each of you and King Solomon Lodge #6 as Worshipful Master for 2026. I look forward to stepping into this honorable position, not only with pride but humility.

Recently, we have moved forward, as a lodge, to achieve things that have only been talked about in the past. Things such as getting internet in the lodge, setting dues that are more compatible with current financial times and updating our Facebook and web page. I believe these changes will not only benefit our amazing lodge but will bring new and exciting candidates.

In the upcoming year, I want to see our lodge offer more educational opportunities. Things such as speaker series, brothers learning something new and interesting about Freemasonry. Taking that knowledge and teaching others in the lodge. More brothers joining our Monday and Thursday training on floor work and ritual work. Not only would this training be invaluable but the fellowship that goes with it will be phenomenal.

In closing, I want to thank each and every one of you for your trust and confidence in me to be your Worshipful Master for 2026.

BE THE LIGHT!

Sincerely and fraternally,

Eddie Pollard, WM

The Sumner County Family Resource Center exists to provide support and resources, and to implement quality programs that strive to engage and empower families. Their vision is to provide families with basic resources such as clothing, food, toiletries and shoes to ensure the student is ready to learn when in the classroom. This was our November Charity.

During King Solomon's Lodge #6 October Chili Cook-off, we competed for the best chili, hot chili, and soup using monetary donations, along with an entry fee or donations of socks and underwear. Everything collected went to the Summer County Schools Family Resource Center. Pictured are members WM Monte Green, Treasurer James Lampley, JW Jeremy McMahon, and Chaplain Ron Taulman with Cathy Graff, director, and Jennifer Chenoweth from the Sumner County Family Resource Center.

In December 2025, our charitable initiative focused on supporting several children from the Gallatin Daycare Center who benefit from additional assistance. The shopping event was well attended and allowed us to acquire a variety of meaningful gifts for the children. The positive impact and joy experienced during this effort have inspired us to commit to making it an annual tradition. Along with providing gifts, we plan to make a financial contribution to Gallatin Daycare Center in recognition of their ongoing commitment to the future of our community. We remain dedicated to this important work and invite others to participate alongside us.

Thank you to everyone who participated in this year's parade. We welcome additional participants and encourage you to consider joining us next year, as it is an excellent opportunity for public engagement. We extend our special thanks to Robbie Pollard for his contributions to the development of our new Parade Mobile. Maintaining visibility is important, and your involvement plays a significant role in achieving this goal.

We have just finished our annual tradition of delivering fruit baskets to widows in our community. Although the number of recipients has declined over time, this event continues to bring happiness to those who receive the baskets and reminds them they are appreciated. While not everyone involved is shown, several members appear in the photo below. We sincerely thank Mary Beaver for coordinating with Kroger Marketplace in Gallatin and Brad Beaver for keeping track of the list of widows and organizing this meaningful event each year. Our gratitude goes out to everyone whose hard work helped make this occasion a success.

Earlier in 2025, we started renovating the old dining hall that had become a storage and study space. The room was divided in two, and a bookshelf with a secret door were added. Cedar now lines the walls, and we've reserved areas on the left side for Masonic artwork. Starting the first week of Here soon, we'll begin finishing the walls and entryway with more cedar paneling. While the lodge funded the initial phase, the remainder has been generously supported by one of our members. Special thanks go to Brothers Ron Taulman and Jim Scruggs for their craftsmanship and dedication in making this project a reality. With time, resources, creativity, and masonry, remarkable transformations are possible. Please stop by to see the changes—if you haven't visited in a while, we'd love to welcome you back!

It is a work in progress, but we are just proud to be moving one way or another!

Masonic Americanism: How Fraternal Values Shaped a Nation

Freemasonry in America isn't just a club that happened to take root here—it's woven into the very fabric of the country. From the nation's birth, the ideals and teachings of the Masons have influenced how America understands freedom, justice, and citizenship. "Masonic Americanism" describes this deep connection: the conscious blending of Masonry's moral lessons with the spirit and purpose of the United States. This isn't some side note to American Masonry—it's its very core.

History speaks volumes. Out of the 56 men who signed the Declaration of Independence, at least nine were confirmed Masons, and maybe more. Of the 39 who put their names on the Constitution, thirteen were Masons, including heavyweights like Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, and many of the committee that wrote the document. Washington himself took the first presidential oath on a Masonic Bible—a tradition that carries on in special ceremonies today—and he placed the Capitol's cornerstone dressed in full Masonic attire. The officer ranks of the Continental Army were full of Masons, too. They brought with them the same moral code and symbols from their lodges, treating even enemy Masons with a unique respect, even in the heat of battle.

This wasn't just by chance. Freemasonry gave the revolutionaries a common language of values—words and ideas they'd use to define what it meant to be American. In colonial times, the lodge was one of the few places where men of different Christian backgrounds, and even a few Deists, gathered as equals—“on the level”—free from church authority. It was a living example of brotherhood across religious, social, and, impressively for its time, ethnic lines. So, when Thomas Jefferson wrote that “all men are created equal,” he wasn't inventing the idea out of thin air; he was adapting something many of the Founders had already practiced behind the lodge's closed doors.

The Masons' stress on freedom of conscience, respect for the individual, charity, and seeking truth through reason all found their way into America's founding documents. The lodge's "Great Lights"—the Sacred Book, Square, and Compasses—became, for many Founders, a portable guide to moral law, one that stood above the kings and empires they rejected. In a real sense, America is Masonry put into practice.

But Masonic Americanism isn't just a thing of the past. It's stayed relevant because the threats it was meant to counter haven't disappeared. In the 1830s, for example, the Anti-Masonic Party—the first major third party—tried to paint the Masons as a shadowy group at odds with American democracy. In response, Masons doubled down on patriotism: flag ceremonies, public events, and support for public schools. They made it clear that being a Mason and being an American went hand in hand.

During the Civil War, Masons on both sides kept fraternal bonds alive, even while fighting each other, maintaining a thin thread of unity through the nation's darkest times. In the 1900s, as totalitarian regimes like Hitler's, Stalin's, and Franco's targeted Freemasonry for destruction, American Masons saw those attacks as assaults on the very principles the United States stood for. Freemasonry became a steadfast opponent of Communism—not by getting involved in politics, which is forbidden from doing, but by standing up for liberty of conscience, equality before the law, and human dignity. These are values that both Masonry and America refuse to compromise.

In the Cold War, the Masonic Service Association sent "Short Talk Bulletins" about Americanism to lodges nationwide, Grand Lodges set up committees focused on American values, and the Scottish Rite made defending the Constitution a key part of its rituals. These weren't just side projects; they reflected the belief that being an American is a kind of moral craft, one that takes ongoing practice—just like the work done in the lodge.

Even today, as conspiracy theories about secret societies spread (with us often cast as villains), Masonic Americanism provides a clear answer: We're not secretive, just private. We don't undermine the nation; we uphold it. Masons have fought and died in every one of America's wars. They've built more children's hospitals than any other private group. Meetings begin with the Pledge of Allegiance and end with prayers for the betterment of others. The lodge teaches men to govern themselves so that external government can stay small—a principle older than the country itself.

Masonic Americanism is especially important now, as America faces a crisis of shared values but resists religious rule. Freemasonry is a nonsectarian but deeply moral framework, insisting that liberty comes with personal responsibility. In an age when many institutions have become politicized or hollow, the Masonic lodge is still a place where men with wildly different opinions can meet as equals, bound to treat each other with respect and reminded of their shared moral heritage.

America wasn't inevitable. It was brought into being by men who learned through Masonry that freedom and virtue go hand in hand, that brotherhood must be lived out, not just talked about, and that a nation devoted to human dignity needs citizens who take that mission seriously. Masonic Americanism keeps that insight alive. If Freemasonry survives in America, so does the nation's deepest moral foundation.

That's why it's not just important, it's truly essential.

From the Secretary

We're kicking off the new year with important updates for the Craft. Our by-laws have been amended, adopted, and submitted to the Grand Lodge. The biggest changes involve dues and conferral fees.

Dues are now structured on a tiered system. Members who are 65 years old or younger as of January 1 will pay $100 per year. Those over 65 will pay $85 per year, offering no change for many members and providing a retirement benefit for others. This approach helps keep membership affordable and addresses budget gaps. There are no changes to the Grand Lodge's per capita fees; however, if those fees increase, our dues will automatically adjust to cover the additional cost.

Conferral fees have also changed: candidates must now pay upfront for all three degrees, with the fee increased to $300. With this increase, we've added meaningful gifts for candidates during their degree journey. New additions include a lodge challenge coin for Entered Apprentices (EA), a lambskin apron, and a full-color Patent marking their lodge journey as Master Masons. We've also upgraded the presentation Bible to a Large Family style edition—candidates will keep the same Bible they used for all oaths and obligations, making it a significant keepsake.

Data from the Grand Lodge and other lodges that require upfront payment for all degrees show retention rates as high as 70%, which we hope to replicate. Historically, our retention rate is low, so we're working to improve this not only through upfront payments but also via the Conduct Committee, which tracks and works with EAs and FCs who haven't advanced in six months.

We accomplished a lot last year and are eager to see positive results. Your participation at lodge is most welcome!
