

Master's Message

Greetings from the East.

Brethren,

I hope this finds each of you well. Our recent crawfish boil was a great success and a wonderful opportunity for fellowship. Special thanks go to Brother Colton McDonald and all the other Brothers who jumped in to assist—your hard work made the event truly special.

I am also pleased to report that we have received several new membership applications. It is clear that the efforts we are putting into our social media presence and lodge bulletins are bearing real fruit!

Looking ahead, we have some important issues to address regarding the lodge roof and our rental property. Please make every effort to attend our upcoming Stated Meeting so we can discuss these matters together.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Wor. Robert E. Pollard

Masonic Funerals

Masonic funerals are among the few ceremonies Freemasons perform openly, in the presence of family, friends, and the public. Reserved primarily for a Master Mason in good standing (and, under certain circumstances, for other brethren), the service is conducted at the request of the departed Brother or his family. It is not intended to replace a religious or family funeral, but to complement it—offering a final fraternal tribute that honors the Brother's life, his Masonic journey, and the enduring bonds of the Craft.

The roots of these rites reach back to the operative stonemasons of the Middle Ages. In the guilds and lodges of that era, craftsmen who labored side by side for years would gather to bury one of their own with solemnity and respect. They spoke of the hope of eternal life and the continuing duty of the living to support the widows and orphans left behind. These practical acts of brotherhood formed the foundation upon which later Masonic customs were built.

With the rise of speculative Freemasonry in the early 18th century, the funeral observances became more formalized. The simple customs of the operative masons were infused with the philosophical and moral teachings of the Craft. As lodges spread across Europe and into the New World, the ceremony gradually took on the dignified form still recognized today. While details may differ from one Grand Lodge jurisdiction to another, the essential elements remain remarkably uniform throughout the Masonic world—an ancient tradition adapted to remind the living of their own mortality and of the virtues that outlast the grave.

History offers several memorable examples. In 1785, Brother Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart composed his solemn Maurerische Trauermusik (Masonic Funeral Music) for a lodge of sorrow held in memory of two of his brethren. Fourteen years later, on December 18, 1799, members of Alexandria Lodge No. 22 conducted Masonic rites at the funeral of Brother George Washington, following the Episcopal Order of Burial. These and countless quieter observances over the centuries have kept the custom alive as one of Freemasonry's most visible and meaningful public acts.

The service itself is rich in quiet symbolism. The white lambskin apron, placed upon the casket or remains, recalls the first gift given to every Entered Apprentice and stands as an emblem of purity and honorable conduct. The sprig of acacia, or evergreen, speaks of the immortality of the soul—the enduring hope that, though the body returns to the earth, the spirit lives on. The ceremony repeatedly returns to a central truth expressed in the ritual: “The last offices paid to the dead are useful as lessons to the living.” In remembering a Brother, those present are gently reminded to live with greater kindness, integrity, and purpose.

Ultimately, a Masonic funeral serves several purposes at once. It pays lasting tribute to the departed Brother’s contributions to the Craft. It offers tangible comfort and continued support to his family, especially his widow and orphans. For the brethren who take part, it reaffirms the core tenets of Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth. And for non-Masons who witness it, the service often provides a first glimpse into the quiet dignity and moral seriousness of Freemasonry.

From the stonemasons’ guilds of centuries past to the present day, the Masonic funeral remains a simple yet profound expression of respect, continuity, and hope. In performing these last offices, we not only honor one who has laid down his working tools; we renew our own commitment to the principles that bind us together in life and beyond.

The Tennessee Lodge of Research, F. & A. M., is a subordinate lodge instituted to foster and expand knowledge of the history and philosophy of the craft by encouraging masonic study and research, thereby assisting the Grand Lodge in its diffusion of masonic light and education by publishing masonic information and educational material. It was formed in 1983 and received its charter in 1985.

Meetings are held quarterly on the first Saturday of March and the second Saturday of each June, September, and December at high twelve. Meetings are held in different lodges and different geographical areas of Tennessee each quarter. Typically, the March meeting is held in West Tennessee (west of the Tennessee River), the June meeting in Middle Tennessee, the September meeting in the East Tennessee area, and the December meeting at our "home Lodge," Sparta Lodge No. 99 in Sparta, TN.

Normally, a meal is served prior to each meeting and a talk about a Masonic or Masonically affiliated subject is presented at each meeting. These talks are presented by both members and nonmembers and an attempt is made to keep them non-esoteric in nature so they may be printed in the proceedings and can be attended by non-masons.

Master Masons interested in joining the Tennessee Lodge of Research reach out to the Secretary at: secretary@tnlor.org

From the Secretary
